

No city better reflects the growth of Canada's western frontier than Calgary.

At the time of its incorporation as a town on November 7, 1884, Calgary's population had grown to 1,000 from approximately 100 three years earlier. The arrival of the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1883 transformed the town from what was originally an outpost of the North West Mounted Police. New homes were being built and new businesses started up everywhere. Churches, banks and social organizations sprouted as the railway opened up a new supply route from the east. People could now buy a larger variety of goods at reasonable prices. The town was alive with the excitement of progress.

That tradition has continued through the years with the development of cattle ranching, agriculture and in 1912, Calgary's first Stampede. Staged continuously since 1923, the Stampede has been Calgary's most successful annual event.

Later, the discovery of oil and gas in southern Alberta helped secure Calgary as a permanent symbol of Western Canada's growth and prosperity.

Today, 100 years following its incorporation, the City of Calgary boasts a population in excess of 600,000. ONWARD serves as a motto for the city's role as centre of business and western culture.

But one thing has not changed. The frontier city of ranchers and cowboys remains a vital part of Calgary's rich heritage. Moreover, it is its source of pride.

MAYOR RALPH KLEIN

His Worship Mayor Ralph Klein was born in Calgary November 1, 1942. He was sworn in as Calgary's 32nd mayor in October, 1980 and was re-elected in 1983 with the largest number of votes ever received by a Calgary mayoralty candidate.

Mayor Klein was educated in the Calgary area and went on to teach at and later become principal of the Calgary Business College.

From 1963 to 1966, Mayor Klein served as director of public relations for the Red Cross. He then became director of public relations and agency affairs for the United Way Fund of Calgary and District, serving in that capacity until 1969.

As a journalist, Mayor Klein was senior civic affairs reporter with CFCN Radio and Television where he worked for 11 years. He has served as director of the Calgary Press Club and has been associated with the Canadian Public Relations Society and the Alberta Motion Picture Industry Association.

Mayor Klein's community involvement has included work with the John Howard Society, Calgary Indian Friendship Society and the Alberta Standard Bred Horseman's Association. He is a founding member of the Huntington Hills Community Church and has actively supported Big Brothers and Uncles at Large.

ever, an exhibition focusing on the real Canadian Cowboy, his historical significance, character and style!

Relive the life of the

For the first time

life of the Canadian Cowboy who tamed the open ranges and established the ranching industry in the Southern Alberta foothills.

"Calgary is a western town .. is peopled by native Canadians and Englishmen ... who own religion and respect law. The rough festive cowboy of Texas and Oregon has no counterpart here. There are two or three beardless lads who wear jingling spurs and walk with a slouch ... THE genuine Alberta Cowboy is a gentleman."
